EDITORIAL

Six months have come and gone and the hot days of summer are ahead of us. In the past, the coin trade usually slowed down during the summer months - not so any more. In February we published the first issue of the Review for 1995 experimenting with a new format of offering coins. Only twenty individual items were featured in this list. The balance of the list was made up of 165 offerings of items we owned in multiples. This Review was mailed to our active and inactive mailing list. The response was phenomenal. We want to thank all of you who took the time to respond either by placing orders or re-subscribing.

In reviewing the performance of past fixed price lists we have noted that our summer lists have always produced the largest number of orders. Welcome to our summer offering of coins at fixed prices. Enclosed with this list is the summer issue of the Review featuring articles, show schedules, books and special offerings. Between the two offerings there are over 1000 different coins and 150 books featured for your consideration. We hope you find a few things for your collection. This list has a good selection of Greek, especially bronzes in nice condition; it also features a nice collection of Roman Republican from an old collection. We are especially pleased to offer coins from the collection of an old time Seaby customer who specialized in coins of the Indian States. The English section features numerous choice early pieces and a nice run of coins from the reign of Queen Anne. There really is something for everyone here.

The spring season has been an interesting one in the financial markets. The dollar took a pounding during the spring months but has recovered slightly of late. As a result of weakness in the dollar the British pound, which mirrors the dollar, has also been weak. The weakness of the dollar and the pound coupled with strength of the German mark and Swiss franc has made it more difficult for Americans to buy at the top echelons in the European sales. The abrupt change in the value of currencies was reflected in slightly weaker results as measured in the local currency in sales on the continent during the spring months. In contrast, we obtained numerous healthy prices in our May New York sale. Some of the better pieces were purchased by overseas clients, but many went to American clients who had been frustrated by high prices in Europe during the spring. By fall, we expect the market to have fully digested the changes in the currency markets. Expect the prices of better grade Greek and Roman to settle at higher prices in dollar terms than were seen last year. Prices of interesting middle grade coins will stay in the same ranges and inexpensive coins will continue to remain that way.

We at CNG are constantly reevaluating our business and looking for ways to better serve our loyal customers. At the recent New York International in May we concluded negotiations with a gentleman who we are pleased to announce has agreed to join the staff at CNG as our Director of Marketing and Public Affairs - Wayne G. Sayles. We have known Wayne for many years and look forward to working with him. He will be on board starting September 1. For more information on Wayne, see the press release on page 11 of the Classical Numismatic Review, Volume XX, 2 (Specials List).

Also joining the staff is Carol Barton. Carol is taking on the processing of orders for coins and books from the Classical Numismatic Review. She is new to the coin business but brings in a strong background in organization and product management. If you have occasion to call the office, chances are good you'll get a chance to talk to Carol.

Exceptional Siculo Punic Issue

35. SICILY, Siculo-Punic. "Ras Melkart" - Selinos? AR Tetradrachm (17.15 gm). Charioteer driving quadriga right, crowned by Nike / Wreathed head of Arethusa with four dolphins around. Jenkins SNR 50, 43 (O16/R33). Choice EF. $6000/£4000

Punic mints in Sicily drew heavily on the coinage traditions of the Greeks of the island, a tradition responsible for some of the greatest masterpieces of numismatic art. The Carthaginian or native engravers recognized the Greek style, but their productions are often of the nature of obvious copies by lesser talents; the details are there but the overall feeling is flat and static. Not so with this specimen. The charioteer guides a spirited team of horses that is both orderly and energetic, while a fully realized Nike hovers above to bestow a victory wreath on his head. Arethusa's head is modeled in high relief and presents the form of a living person, not the two dimensional rendering of such. Accentuating the high style is the full round flan, with few of the marvelous details lacking. Although the location of the mint of "Cape Melkart" is uncertain (Selinos being the latest of a long list of presumed minting spots), it was fortunate to have the services of one of the best of Sicilian workmen.

36. Siculo-Punic. Circa 300-290 BC. AR Tetradrachm (16.92 gm). Head of Herakles / Horsehead and palm. Jenkins SNR 57, 397 (O121/R 325). Choice EF. $1250/£835

Ardeshir's portrait, with its tall tiara with star and chevron decoration, even to the star on his breast is a direct memorial to the greatest of Parthian kings, Mithradates II. This was not mere historicism, but a valued part of the Sassanian ethos that prompted the revolt against the Parthian rulers. Ardeshir saw his rise to power not as a replacement of the ruling house but a reinvigorating of a degenerate people who had lost the nomadic fierceness that created the empire. Ardeshir repudiated the last 300 years of Parthian history and instead invoked the memory of the first and greatest "King of Kings".

Following the murder of Commodus in 192 AD, Pertinax, one of the leading politicians of his time, was proclaimed emperor, and after a reign of only 3 months, he was murdered. With his death, a period of civil wars ensued as Septimius Severus, Clodius Albinus, Didius Julianus and Pescennius Niger all vied for the title of emperor. When the news of Pertinax's death reached the frontier, the Pannonian troops proclaimed Severus as emperor and he immediately gained the full support of all the legions stationed along the Rhine and Danube and those closest to Rome. Severus declared himself to be Pertinax's avenger and assumed the name Pertinax. Severus marched on Rome and quickly defeated Didius Julianus. Upon entering the city, Severus celebrated an elaborate state funeral for the Consecration of Pertinax, for which this coin was struck.

The reverse type is taken directly from the Constantinian period wolf and twins follis of the 330's. On the half follis, this typically includes the twin stars above the wolf that were part of the original design. The Vandalic pieces place an officina symbol (an I or a christogram) between the stars, with one variety (MIB 71a) having these marks in the exergue. The engraver had moved the stars also, not realizing they were part of the design, not of the officina mark. The present piece is the only full follis known with the stars used in the officina mark, as well as using the Christogram instead of numerals or letters.

POSSIBLY THE FINEST KNOWN

624. SUDAN. Mohammed Ahmed-"The Mahdi". AH 1302 (1885 AD). AR 20 Piastres. KM 2. Choice EF, full strike. (SEE ENLARGEMENT ON BACK COVER). $1650/£1100

One of the Finest Known. A superb example of a rare coin of the utmost historic interest. Mohammed Ahmed, sheik of the Dongolese tribe in Sudan, declared himself the Mahdi or guide of Islam, the successor of Ali. Over the course of the year 1883-1884 Mahdist forces annihilated several Anglo-Egyptian armies sent to put down what had become a general revolt against foreign influence in the Sudan. Gen. Charles Gordon, who had achieved wide renown for his service in China and Egypt, was ordered to Khartoum in February 1884 to evacuate foreign nationals before the capital fell to Ahmed. Although most of the civilians escaped in time, Gordon, due to either devotion to duty or misinterpretation of his orders, refused to abandon the city, instead urging the dispatch of a relief force to raise what had become a full siege of Khartoum. Public pressure finally forced a reluctant British government to send such a force, but before it could arrive Khartoum fell and Gordon was killed in January 1885. Ahmed himself would die later that year, eliminating the main threat to British and Egyptian rule in Sudan, although his successor Abdullah would not be overthrown until 1898.

INDIA

Coins of the Indian sub-continent. A wide range of states and types, common to rare, from a collection formed by a former missionary to India.

India possesses a coinage tradition as extensive and complex as the more widely known western world. Although fierce debate still rages on the date of the introduction of coinage to India, with dates as early as the 8th century BC being proposed, it appears that widespread coin usage did not occur until the early 4th century BC. States such as Avanti, Kosala and Magadha issued their distinctive punchmarked silver Karshapanas, which were also adopted by the Mauryan kingdom that followed.

The intrusion of the Greeks into northern India resulted in the diffusion of western styles of coin types, traces of which can still be seen in the early gold staters of the Kushan kings. A mixture of western and native styles characterized the coinage of the medieval kingdoms of India until the next great wave of foreign influence; the arrival of Muslim invaders in the 12th century, marked by the conquest of Dehli by Mohammed bin Sam in 1193. The dynasties of the Dehli sultans were masters of India until the next and greatest dynasty took their place.

The Mughals kings were descendants of Tamurlane, and the family tradition of conquest was realized in the campaigns of the founder Babar (1482-1526) and especially his grandson Akbar, who soon controlled a realm reaching from modern day Afghanistan across the sub-continent. The wealth and sophistication of the Mughal court created one of the Golden Ages of human history, producing masterpieces of art and literature, reflected in some small degree in the elegant Persian calligraphy and artwork of their coinage. Unfortunately, the Mughals also brought a taste for decadence and religious intolerance, twin evils that would plague India for the next four hundred years. After Aurangzeb's death in 1707, the Mughal dynasty would become a series of non-entities, the sultans unable to deter the Marathas, Sikhs, Durrani and other factions from snipping away pieces of the empire.

Further disintegration ensued, as throughout the 18th and 19th centuries more minor princes and military chieftains set up their own sovereign states, known as the Native States to the Europeans who had also arrived to meddle in Indian affairs (as well as strike their own coinage). The States ranged from fabulously wealthy principalities such as Hyderabad to "microstates" such as Makrai, consisting of a few scattered villages. The coinage in circulation ranged from the crudest hand-hammered copper piece to gold mohurs and silver rupees machine struck to the highest modern European standard. These symbols of sovereignty, as well as the reality would end with the final unification and independence of India and Pakistan in 1947.

A note on the reference numbers on Indian coins. The standard reference for Indian coins from the Mughal period onward has been the Standard Catalogue of South Asian Coins and Paper Money, published by Krause Mishler (KM). Their numbering sequence was composed of several different systems, Craig, Yeoman, Pridmore and others. In subsequent editions of their Standard Catalogue of World Coins, especially the 2-volume ANA Centennial edition, an attempt was made to begin standardizing the numbering of the later series. In many cases the coins listed below will have a number from the ANA edition with an earlier number from the South Asia catalogue in parentheses next to it.
